the library

Look at those little toddlers over by the bus stop. Poor things. They'll have to wait years before they get their library cards.

OK. There's the WALK sign. We can go across.

Ooohh, look—a bakery. Can we stop for a doughnut, Liz? Pleeze?

They have ice-cream cones too! Is it OK if I have a cone, Liz?

Mmm ... That was tasty. But now I have sticky hands. Do you think they have a bathroom?

I saw two doors over by that No Smoking sign.

Do you need any help, Martin?

No thanks, Liz. I know which door is for boys!

But I can never find the one for mice.

I wish I could get a bumper sticker like that for my Grandma. She loves cats too.

I love cats

BAKERY

She says it's our turn to cross.

Maybe we could stop by the playground on the way home.

OK.

Isn't it nice that the librarian will give us our library cards even before we can read?

It is! She says anyone old enough to take care of a book can have a card. Turn here.

Still, I wish I could read.

Me too. Maybe next year. Ooops, better stop here.

You know, Amy and Martin, words aren't the only things people read. We also read signs, pictures, body language—you've been doing it all day!

Yay! There's the library! You know how I can tell?

Because we come here every week?

No, because I can read the sign! See the book?
